Reasons behind Gender Stereotyping in Women Skill Development

- Gender Gap in Education- Percentage share of male is significantly higher than female in almost every level of higher education. This is mainly due to drop out as they have to do either household chores following early marriages or be employed otherwise.
- Women remain socially marginalized and underrepresented within, as well as, outside of households in India as they are unskilled and mostly found in informal sector.
- Sometimes, the female participation in labour force is more delusional-like in agriculture sector, where women participation is quite high, but in reality, they mostly work as helpers due to their eternal status of low-skill.
